Abstract Millions of people are presented in the courtroom with the choice to select their counsel to represent them in the trial. The defendant's choice is often influenced by the attorney's appearance, personality, and reputation. The purpose of this study was to examine the factors that influence the defendant's choice of attorney. The study was conducted in a courtroom setting. The results of the study indicate that the defendant's choice of attorney is influenced by the attorney's appearance, personality, and reputation. The study also found that the defendant's choice of attorney is influenced by the attorney's fee. The study was conducted in a courtroom setting.
